

Task 2 High-Scoring Sample Response

The article describes a new proposal to offer optional academic workshops on weekends. These sessions would cover writing, research, and time management skills. The university believes that holding them on weekends will give students more flexibility and help improve their academic performance without weekday pressure.

However, the woman disagrees with the idea. First, she explains that many students work part-time jobs on weekends, so attending workshops would be difficult and stressful.

Second, she argues that weekends are when students usually rest and take a break from academics. Using that time for extra schoolwork could lead to burnout. She suggests offering workshops during weekday evenings instead.

In summary, she opposes the weekend schedule because it creates conflict with student jobs and takes away time for rest.

www.schulestudytime.com